

Wakefield Forms Ticket Selling Brigade

Wakefield had thirty students sign up yesterday for the school's ticket selling contest, which is designed to introduce season baseball pass books to the public.

In an effort to provide more convenience and greater economy for Arlington's baseball public, Wakefield is selling adult and student ticket books, which contain twelve ducats which are good for any home games the purchaser chooses to use them for.

These books, on sale by students and faculty members, provide terrific savings for all purchasers. The burden of standing in line for tickets on game day is erased when a spectator has his book and can go right to the entrance. These books can be used by several people or the owner can elect to attend all twelve games himself.

Awards for the ticket-book promoting contest range from a first prize of a three-speed phonograph to such articles as baseball gloves and grandstand tickets to one of the Washington Senators' baseball games at Griffith Stadium.

The prizes are going on exhibition in one of the school's hall display cases today and contestants can view the awards they are competing for.

Adult season books sell for $5.00 and students' passbooks go for $2.50 each.

Wakefield officials expect many more aspirants to enter the contest than the original thirty entries. Many students were busy after school yesterday with activities that accumulated as a result of the storm scare Tuesday, which caused the school to postpone many activities.
